RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS

from all stations in life, native-born and foreigners, the latter being mostly German and Irish, with a preponderance of Germans, for in the few years previous to the breaking out of the war there were many thousands of immigrants to this country from all parts of Germany, and Perrysburg township got its full share of them, most of whom became sturdy and thrifty tillers of the soil. There were 135 Germans arrived in Perrysburg at one time, all from the same locality in the old country. And at President Lincoln's call for troops in April, 1861, the foreigners as well as the native-born Americans were eager to enlist to serve their adopted country. And it was only through pure patriotism that these Irish and Germans volunteered, for there was no way in which the foreigners could have been compelled to do military service here for very few of them had even taken out their first naturalization papers or declared their intentions. They were still subjects of a foreign country therefore exempt from military duty unless they chose to volunteer. There was no thought of pensions, as pension laws were passed after the war began; no bounties, for they came later; no thought of preferment or of political ambition for the future; no "selective draft," such a thing was not needed. With them it was simply a case of patriotism—they thought it was their duty. The first man to enlist in Perrysburg, or in Wood county, for the matter, was a native-born—John W. Chappell, and he was only a boy of 18. The first soldier from Perrysburg killed in battle, and in whose honor the Grand Army Post was named, was a German—John Wolfert—not Wolford—and he was only a boy of 16—a member of Capt. Frank Sauter's Company B, 55th Regiment, O. V. I.—killed at the battle of Bull Run, Va. And the one family in the town that furnished more soldiers for the Union Army than any other—five in number, the McMahan's—was Irish. Their ages ranged from 16 to 28 years. And the father of these five wanted to enlist, but was rejected for physical disability. And of such as these is the Grand Army of the Republic composed, so it is eminently fitting and proper that they have charge of the Memorial Day ceremonies and patriotic exercises, not only in these, but on other occasions. And it was a Grand Army—the grandest army that the Almighty ever allowed to be assembled, composed as it was, of native-born and foreigners, all fighting for the one object—to save the government from destruction from within—not for the acquisition of territory; not to gain markets for our commerce; not through jealousy of other governments; not to further the political ambitions of any man, or any set of men—but for an undivided government in the land in which the natives had been born, and the land to which the foreigners had come to make for themselves permanent homes and to rear their families.

In the years gone by the Grand Army patrons of the Memorial Day parades were sometimes rather huge affairs in the larger cities, and the marchers passed with a firm and steady tread that always caused a feeling of pride and joy within the onlookers. But with the passing of years the ranks were gradually thinned out, and the step no longer so firm and steady, and while a parade of the veterans still causes a feeling of pride, it is more or less a pathetic pride. Of the several hundred thousand who at one time constituted the membership of the Grand Army of the Republic, there are but a few thousand left. They are passing to the eternal camping ground very rapidly. This was brought to my mind very forcibly in a letter from my sister some time ago in which, after announcing the death of a very dear friend of our family who was a member of Wolford Post, she used these words: "Every year less and less soldiers to march with our little Grand Army Post; every year more and more graves to decorate in our little cemetery."
